EDUCATION

Emory University School of Law 2026

Old Dominion University 2022

Ugoola Nnawulezi is an attorney at Morgan & Morgan's Atlanta office, where she represents individuals and families who have been injured as a result of the negligence of others. She is committed to advocating for her clients and ensuring they receive the attention, guidance, and representation they deserve throughout the legal process.

Ugoola earned her Juris Doctor from Emory University School of Law. Her dedication to advocacy earned her induction into the Order of Emory Advocates, an honor society recognizing excellence in oral advocacy, brief writing, and trial techniques. She also competed in the Southeastern Regional Black Law Students Association Thurgood Marshall Moot Court Competition, advancing to the semifinal round with her teammate. Additionally, she served as an assistant coach for Emory Law's BLSA Moot Court program and competed on the school's Transactional Law Negotiation Team.

Beyond her advocacy experience, Ugoola served as Vice President of Emory's Black Law Students Association and Executive Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Editor of the Emory International Law Review, Volume 40. Her academic achievements include three CALI Excellence for the Future Awards, recognizing the highest-performing students in their respective courses.

Ugoola approaches her practice with a strong sense of responsibility, diligence, and compassion. She understands that an injury can affect far more than a person's physical well-being, often impacting their families, livelihoods, and everyday lives. She is passionate about helping clients navigate difficult circumstances and ensuring their voices are heard.
