EDUCATION

Virginia Tech

Suffolk University Law School

Alexander has devoted his practice to holding negligent property owners, businesses, and insurers accountable when unsafe conditions cause preventable injuries. He focuses his practice on representing seriously and permanently injured individuals in catastrophic general liability matters, including premises liability, negligent security, dog bite, and other injury-causing incidents.

Alexander has recovered millions of dollars for clients through both negotiated settlements and trial. His results reflect more than experience; they demonstrate to insurers and defense counsel that he prepares every case with the diligence, strategy, and resolve necessary to pursue full and fair compensation for his clients.

Alexander earned his J.D., with pro bono honors, from Suffolk University Law School, where he served as Executive Editor of the Suffolk Transnational Law Review. He received his B.A. in Political Science, cum laude, from Virginia Tech.

Alexander lives in Boston with his wife and son.
