John Marshall Law School 2000

William Clayton Porter, II, known as Clay, is a dedicated attorney specializing in premises liability cases. A native of Savannah, Georgia, Clay's deep connection to his home state has shaped his commitment to justice and community. He began his educational journey at Armstrong Atlantic State University, where he earned his Bachelor of Science in Criminal Justice in 1998, laying a solid foundation for his legal career.

Determined to continue his legal education in Georgia, Clay attended John Marshall Law School in Atlanta, earning his Juris Doctor in 2000. During his time in law school, he gained practical experience working as a warrant officer for Fulton County. This role gave him a comprehensive understanding of the legal system and reinforced his dedication to upholding the law.

After being admitted to the State Bar of Georgia, Clay focused his practice on premises liability, where he has become a trusted advocate for his clients. He has been recognized throughout his career for his strong work ethic, approachable demeanor, and unwavering commitment to achieving justice. Clay Porter brings extensive legal expertise and a genuine passion for helping others to every case he handles, making him a valuable ally for those in need of legal representation.
