EDUCATION

Auburn University- 1994

Florida State University College of Law- 1997

Edward Mason is a Social Security Disability attorney based in the Morgan & Morgan Tampa office. Born in Memphis and raised in North Carolina, Edward found his calling in advocacy early on, developing a passion for serving others during his college years. After graduating from Auburn University in 1994, he earned his Juris Doctor from Florida State University College of Law in 1997.

For the next 27 years, Edward built a successful career at a small firm, where he became a partner and focused his practice on Social Security Disability and Workers' Compensation law. His commitment to client service and clear communication has always been a cornerstone of his work. He takes pride in making sure his clients understand their case and can trust his guidance every step of the way.

Edward and his wife have called Florida home for over three decades, raising two daughters who both followed in their parents' Auburn Tiger footsteps. Outside the office, he enjoys traveling, watching college sports, attending concerts, and staying active in his local church. Known for his dry sense of humor and straightforward approach, Edward continues to serve clients with the honesty, empathy, and dedication that have defined his career.

IN THEIR WORDS

"Originally I thought I would obtain justice through the criminal court system, but in my first job, I found fulfillment in helping people who have been injured or become unable to work in their times of need."
