EDUCATION

University of Miami

St. John's University School of Law

Chris Mukon has always been devoted to fighting the good fight. He received his Bachelor of Fine Arts degree from the University of Miami then his Juris Doctor from St. John's University School of Law. After passing the New York Bar Exam, he started his own solo legal practice, focusing primarily on helping the people. He represented clients in various areas such as Social Security Disability, Landlord/Tenant, Real Estate, and General Litigation. In Housing court, he often served as a Guardian Ad Litem, helping to protect the rights of disabled New Yorkers facing eviction.

In 2020, Chris decided to pursue Social Security Disability claims full time, working for nationally recognized firms and representing thousands of claimants in all stages of the disability process. He has a deep understanding of the complex regulatory scheme that makes disability cases so difficult to navigate. His compassionate advocacy focuses on helping claimants understand the system and the best ways to optimize their chances of success. He has zealously represented claimants in hundreds of hearings before Administrative Law Judges at the Social Security Administration.

Though a seasoned and fierce advocate, Chris prides himself most on his dedication to understanding and communicating with his clients on a personal level. He understands that developing trust and rapport with his clients is not just his obligation as an attorney, but is an essential part of putting them in the best possible position to win their case. This approach has proven essential to Chris's continued success representing clients in Social Security Disability cases.
