EDUCATION

Southwestern Law School

Matthew Behboud built an impressive academic foundation at Southwestern Law School, graduating at the top of his class. Throughout his law school tenure, Matthew demonstrated exceptional commitment to legal scholarship and dispute resolution, actively serving as a Lead Editor for the Southwestern Law Review and honing his advocacy techniques as a dedicated member of the Negotiation Honors Program.

Upon entering private practice, Matthew initially focused his career on civil litigation defense. In this role, he represented insurance carriers and businesses facing personal injury claims, gaining invaluable firsthand experience in corporate defense strategies. This background gave him a unique, inside perspective on how insurance companies, defense attorneys, and corporations evaluate, investigate, and defend personal injury lawsuits.

Today, Matthew brings this distinct insight and sharp litigation skill to Morgan and Morgan as an attorney in the Personal Injury Division. By switching sides, he channels his deep understanding of defense tactics into a powerful advantage for his clients, leveling the playing field against major insurance carriers. Known for his approachable demeanor and determined work ethic, Matthew is fully committed to guiding injured individuals through the legal process and advocating fiercely to help them secure the maximum compensation they deserve.
