Tony Friedman began his legal journey by stepping into the intricate world of patent law and complex patent litigation. Early in his career, he immersed himself in sophisticated disputes involving cutting-edge technology, intellectual property, and high-value commercial interests. This rigorous technical background provided Tony with sharp analytical instincts, an investigative approach to complex facts, and a meticulous eye for detail that would shape the rest of his practice.

Driven by a genuine desire to make a personal difference, Tony soon shifted his focus toward championing everyday people. He transitioned into plaintiff advocacy, discovering his true professional calling in standing up for individuals and families whose lives had been disrupted by severe injuries. Over the years, Tony deepened his litigation experience across both bench and jury trials, managing exhaustive discovery, taking key depositions, and guiding significant injury claims and appellate matters with steady determination.

Building on that track record, Tony honed his craft further by serving as a dedicated trial attorney in St. Louis and later establishing and running his own independent law practice. Guiding his own firm reinforced his hands-on, attentive approach to client care and gave him comprehensive insight into every stage of a dispute. Throughout this period, he earned a reputation as a thorough and strategic advocate who understands how to dissect technical evidence and dismantle defense arguments to hold corporations and insurance companies accountable.

Today, Tony brings that rich, well-rounded background to Morgan & Morgan at the St. Louis office, concentrating his practice on personal injury litigation, premises liability, negligent security, and medical negligence. Licensed to practice law in both Missouri and Illinois, he takes great pride in representing injured people throughout his home community. Approachable, compassionate, and detail-driven, Tony works tirelessly to ensure his clients feel supported and informed every step of the way, fighting diligently to help them secure the justice and full recovery they deserve.
