Conor represents patients and families in medical malpractice matters at Morgan & Morgan in Pennsylvania. He joined the firm after five years as a criminal defense trial lawyer, representing clients in matters including homicide, crimes of violence, narcotics trafficking, and economic crimes. Conor tried cases to verdict, secured dismissals in dozens more, and cross-examined more than one hundred witnesses in court. He handled matters from investigation through trial and appeal, guiding clients and their families through some of the hardest decisions of their lives.

Before entering private practice, Conor served as a judicial law clerk to the Honorable Patricia M. Wild in the Criminal Division of the New Jersey Superior Court.

Conor now brings that courtroom experience and care for the people he represents to medical malpractice cases, where he fights to hold hospitals and healthcare providers accountable when their negligence causes harm.
